

I, the undersigned, acknowledge that if my PhD research proposal is selected by ILL:

- The ILL will pay the student's salary (only partially in case of co-financing). No additional funds will be provided to cover fees or the cost of consumables at the host university. However, the student will be able to apply for support towards the cost of travel to conferences and other activities associated with his/her research during the time he/she is at ILL, as well as for consumables at ILL. The ILL will allow the student to teach a reasonable number of hours at the host university, but will not cover the associated travel expenses.
- If I belong to a British university, I undertake to ensure that my student pays the lowest possible fees.
- The ILL will advertise the selected project and centralise applications from students. However, the ILL supervisor and myself will be in charge of the recruitment of the student. This means that we will agree on the application deadline, select the best 2 candidates and invite them for an interview at ILL. The ILL will not cover my travel expenses for attending the interview at ILL but will reimburse the candidates for travel and accommodation. If I already have a good candidate in mind, I can send in his/her application (which consists of a CV and a covering letter) together with my research proposal.
- The student selected will enrol at my university or at a university where I am authorised to supervise a thesis. I will be his/her official PhD supervisor.
- The ILL will not cover the travel and accommodation costs of jury members for the viva examination of my student at the end of his/her PhD.
